AN “ALL-CUTS” BUDGET WOULD REQUIRE DEEP REDUCTIONS IN FUNDING FOR CALIFORNIA’S PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Battered by a still-weak economy, California faces a $26.6 billion budget shortfall. The Legislature recently approved a spending plan that reflects $12.5 billion in reductions to higher education, child care, health care, and a range of other state services. The spending plan adopted by the Legislature in March essentially “flat funds” California’s public schools in the upcoming budget year. Prior years’ budgets, however, have sharply reduced education funding. On a per student basis, funding has dropped from $8,464 in 2007-08 to $7,358 this year. The choice now is between an “all-cuts” budget that closes the remainder of the gap with additional spending reductions or a balanced approach that includes additional revenues.

How would an “all-cuts” budget affect public schools? In a February 10, 2011 letter to Senator Leno, chair of the Senate Budget and Fiscal Review Committee, the Legislative Analyst’s Office (LAO) outlined a path for closing the budget gap without the Governor’s tax proposals that would require even deeper reductions to all areas of the budget, including public education.<sup>1</sup> This analysis uses the $4.6 billion reduction to state support for schools assumed by the LAO – a reduction of approximately $764 per student – to estimate the loss by school districts under an “all-cuts” budget approach.

Note: Reductions to K-12 districts are calculated based on each school district's 2009-10 average daily attendance (ADA) as a share of total statewide ADA, including students transferred to county offices of education. Charter school ADA is allocated to the K-12 district that provided the charter. Statewide and district ADA calculations exclude ADA from charters received from a county office of education or the state board of education and students transferred as part of the Basic Aid Choice and Basic Aid Court-Ordered Voluntary Pupil Transfer programs. Reductions are rounded to the nearest $1,000 and may not sum to total due to rounding.
